Responsible management of federal, state and local transport infrastructure: Potholes in roads Frank Ojadi

Lagos State of Nigeria is known for many things, but it does not like to be known for its traffic jams, road congestion and large numerous potholes along some major roads and streets. Indeed, the state has consistently been repairing several roads and in some cases the construction of new roads and expansion of old ones have been the order of the day.

This is in addition to the rehabilitation of some Federal roads such as the Apapa Oworonshoki expressway pioneered by Dangote Group of Companies with about 12inch thick concrete-based road construction in recent times. Typical examples.

There appears to be a steady and dramatic increase in potholes from around 30,000-50,000 in the 1990s to the devastatingly high 100,000-300,000 range in recent years at the state level include the VGC fly-over and expansion of some portion of the Lekki-Epe road as well as the international airport road.

Some TV comedians frequently joke with the state of the roads:

“There is a pothole so big on Lekki-Epe road on the approach to ‘Blenco’ store from Epe near the Sango-Tedo U-turn at Ogidan. It has its own ‘pure water depot’ in it. Furthermore, around Farapark Estate very close to the NNPC petrol/diesel filling station in front of the U-turn from Epe is also, another very difficult-to-navigate large pothole. Motorists spend close to over one hour at these potholes.

Accountability: A Determinant for Strong Institutions Ekene Okafor

Accountability, in terms of ethics and governance, as defined by Wikipedia, is equated with answerability, blameworthiness, liability, and the expectation of account-giving. This is one concept that is demanded from not just the government, but institutions and individuals alike.

Accountability is made possible by the institutions one has and, accountability plays a major role in establishing strong institutions. If we do not have something that gives us a valued system within our society, our individuals will not be accountable to the institutions set up.

Here in Nigeria, almost every day, somebody in his or her walk of life is blaming the government for this issue or that issue. We call the governor and the president but never really call ourselves.
